To Finish Education

Among the young men leaving their homes to attend school are the sons of Judge R. B. Capshaw of this city, who left to finish their education at the State University of Indiana.

Coran and Hulon Capshaw leave their home and native State with an enviable reputation as ambitious, studious, moral, high-toned young men and much loved among their home people.

They carry with them rolls of honor, sought and successfully achieved, as pupils of Peabody College of Nashville, which school recently suspended to rebuild a greater one.

Foiled His Honor

Yesterday F. C. Sims called on City Judge Brown to perform a marriage ceremony for a couple waiting in the county judge's office. The justice gave his head a swipe with an old whisp broom, gave a tug at his tie and with his best smile went in to perform the cheerful task. All went off without a hitch. The only thing that was the least out of the ordinary was the fact that the contracting parties nodded their heads instead of making oral responses, but as that was the first time they were married, the judge thought that was due to embarrassment. Later, however, he learned that not a word of his especially prepared ceremony was heard by either since both were deaf and dumb. Unknown to judge Brown Mr. Sims was standing behind him giving him the sign to the couple at the proper time and in that way made the marriage a successful affair. Judge Brown was a trifle disappointed to know that his eloquence and good advice had not been heard, for he prides himself on being an expert welder of hearts and his lecture is guaranteed to make the union divorce proof.

The above was clipped from an Ada, Okla., paper. The Judge Brown referred to is Henry Brown, who formerly made Cookeville his home.
